Matt Caporale (standing) is looking forward to the inaugural Connecticut Regional Cybersecurity Career Fair.

Abe Baggili, Ph.D., has, for several years, been eager for the University of New Haven to lead the state in cybersecurity education and workforce development.

The event – a culmination of the University's celebration of Cybersecurity Awareness Month – will be held virtually on Wednesday, October 28, from 12 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Dr. Baggili, founding director of the University's Connecticut Institute of Technology, says the fair is a great opportunity for students and faculty to connect with industry professionals.

"We are excited to lead this event with our fellow schools and to put Connecticut on the map as a leader in cybersecurity education and workforce development," he said.

"As the leading cybersecurity and technology hub in the state of Connecticut, the Connecticut Institute of Technology is proud to lead this event," he said.

The career fair, which will be held virtually on Wednesday, October 28, from 12 p.m. to 5 p.m., will feature a variety of virtual networking opportunities and presentations.

"Cybersecurity and technology are top talent needs across all industries," he said. "Connecticut is a leader in cybersecurity education and workforce development, and we are proud to lead this event."

Abe Baggili, Ph.D., is founding director of the University's Connecticut Institute of Technology. Sponsored by Webster Bank, the event will enable students to interview with representatives of leading technology companies. Organizers hope to elevate the state as a leading place to recruit for positions in the technology sector. “I am proud that, in the midst of an international pandemic, the University of New Haven is providing this opportunity for our students.”
