Students enrolled in CJST 5530 'Investigating Financial Crimes' this fall at UNH are learning from Michael Clark, senior lecturer in criminal justice at UNH and a former FBI Supervisory Special Agent.
Preparing students to succeed in booming field.

"The unique ACFCS Educational Partner Program reflects the commitment of UNH to help students succeed in the field."

"The unique ACFCS Educational Partner Program reflects the commitment of UNH to help students succeed in the field," said Mario Gaboury, Dean of the Henry C. Lee College of Criminal Justice and Forensic Science.

"CFCS is the only certification that encompasses the full spectrum of financial crimes, including fraud, money laundering, and securities fraud."

"Partnering with ACFCS aligns with the University of New Haven's mission to provide the highest quality education and training for students."

Allen Love, a member of the Advisory Board of ACFCS and the Bank Secrecy Act Officer at UNH, said, "We are proud to be joining 'innovative organization' and 'student-focused' university."

Love said, "The new relationship between ACFCS and UNH can serve as a model on how a law enforcement agency can partner with an educational institution."

Charles A. Intriago, president of ACFCS and a former US federal prosecutor, said, "We look forward to this partnership with UNH."

"ACFCS is proud to partner with such a forward-thinking educational institution as the University of New Haven."

"By this partnership with ACFCS, UNH is providing its students with a unique opportunity to gain valuable experience in the field."

ACFCS certification obtained in 56 countries in first 4 months.

The CFCS credential is viewed as being so valuable that since May 2013, when it was issued, it has been in high demand.
